Dear Mrs Anderson,

Thank you for helping me get on this student exchange program! It is wonderful! My first week here in the Netherlands is over. I promised to write, so here I go.

The school is amazing! People here have been very welcoming and friendly. The Dutch are happy to have international students.

The building is huge. There is a large library with thousands of books. There are also computers with free access to the internet and some special e-libraries. It also offers study rooms where you can read, do homework, or work on a project with your team, too.

Here in the Netherlands, they love science. At the school there are several research labs where the students do different experiments. There is one for our classes in Chemistry and one for Physics, both with very modern equipment. These are my favourite classes.

Sports are also important here. We have physical education (PE) twice a week, but we can use the sports facilities in the afternoons and in the evenings. There are two gyms, an open-air football pitch and a tennis court.

The campus is wonderful! There are fields with grass where students just sit and chat or study in the sun. It's fantastic!

Bye for now!

Best regards,

George

READING COMPREHENSION

Task Three

Read the text below and the questions to it. Answer each question with a sentence of your own. Write your answers on your answer sheet. Sentences copied word for word from the text will get 0 points.

Is Social Media Bad for You?

Three billion people, around 40% of the world's population, use online social media – and they're spending an average of two hours every day sharing, liking, and updating on these platforms.

People use social media to complain about everything. Research shows that social platforms make women more stressed because they make them think about other people's stress. At the same time, however, social platforms also had the opposite effect on the women in the study– the more often the women used them, the less stressed they were. The same effect wasn't found with men because they weren't so emotional when using social media.

While some studies have found a link between depression and social media use, there is evidence that social media can actually be a force for good. Two studies among more than 700 students found that depressive symptoms, such as sadness and hopelessness, were linked to the quality of online interactions. Hating and cyber-bullying can cause depression. But if online communication is positive, it can increase people's happiness. On social media you can immediately get good news, support from your friends, or something funny to laugh about.

The problem may not be social platforms themselves, but the way people use them.

26. What part of the world's population use online social platforms?

27. What made women, according to the research done, feel less stressed?

28. Why is the effect of social platforms different on men?

29. What are the two examples mentioned in the text of negative behaviour on social media that can make people depressed?

30. What behaviour on social media can make people happier?

International Pillow Fight Day

“Three, two, one, go!” That is how the hour of street fun began. This year more than 100 cities around the world took part in the International Pillow Fight Day, including London, New York, and Hong Kong, to name just a few.

The first World Pillow Fight Day took place in March 2008, and since then the movement has grown in the name of fun. This is a chance for adults to wake the child in them and have a good old-fashioned pillow fight in public. Many see the event as a fun way to relieve the stress and pressure of city life. The rules are simple: Hit lightly. Don't hit people without pillows. Soft pillows only! Bring a bag to help clean up after.

Hundreds of people, many in pyjamas, took part in the battle of fluff in the town square. Of course, there wasn't any bloodshed, just thousands of feathers. Traditionally, after the fight, the participants collected all fluff and feathers and left the streets cleaner than they were before.
